Background

Parliamentary oversight of the security sector is a new phenomenon in Europe. It was not until 1989 that both Western European states with a long democratic tradition and new democracies in Eastern Europe started implementing oversight mechanisms. Various countries have adopted different systems of security sector oversight, as reflected in differences in legislation and institutions involved. Parliamentary tools for exercising oversight of the security sector are Security Committees. Their efficiency is directly dependent on their capabilities to work in accordance with the following preconditions: clearly defined constitutional and legal powers, customary practices, resources, expertise and political will.

With this seminar RACVIAC tries to serve as a forum that helps in building and developing a common understanding on the implementation of the above-mentioned Parliamentary tools on security issues in SEE Region.
